LABI Takes a Parody Break; 'Aorta crushing' placed on Hold

After threatening repeatedly during the 2015 Louisiana Legislative session to “toss spears through hearts” and “crush aortas”, the Louisiana Association of Business and Industry is showing its lighter side this election cycle.

LABI President Steve Waguespak, sporting a flashing red nose and costumed in a white doctor's smock, announced the launch of the parody twitter campaign, “Let's Get it Wrong, Louisiana” standing next to LABI strong man Lane Grigsby.

Grigsby, sporting a faux bone through his nose and covered only in an animal skin loin cloth, stabbed a rubber spear into the air and chanted, “through the heart, through the heart.”

“Look, we're not just about aorta crushing and spear chunking,” the LABI President said cheerfully. “We're fun folks too. Friends often refer to me as ‘Wags’, the doctor of good humor.”

Taking a giant swig from a bottle of Old Skullcrusher, Grigsby said the jokes will keep coming.

“Being this funny ain't cheap,” Grigsby slurred. But the voters need to know that we're just good-time guys. We're ready to toss money like a monkey flings whatever it is that a monkey flings.”

Both gentleman concluded their comments by assuring supporters that this “humor hiatus” will conclude with the election of a new governor.

“It will be a thousand spears to the heart thereafter,” sneered the LABi President.
